College scholars' monitoring and evaluation

College scholars Joje Ariego, Alexandra Faith Lasola, Joshua Atip, and John Christian Sarmiento gave a good account of themselves during their monitoring and evaluation. We are grateful to Ms. Gloria Jane Baylon, Ms. Helen Olermo, and Ms. Priscilla Maddela for doing the face-to-face interviews, as well as to Ms. Ria Ann Tan for interviewing via Google Meet.

Know Your Scholar: Yanel Lago

TRACE scholar Yanel is on her first year of BS Nursing at Far Eastern University. She talks about how her new experiences as a college student and as a Foundation scholar are motivating her in her course.

During the first semester, I really had a hard time adjusting to being a college student. For instance, every day it takes me an hour to go to school, and it drains me a lot. I get to encounter different people as I ride trains and jeepneys, and I become curious about what's going on in their minds—if they are having a hard time, if they are feeling any pain, or how their day went. As a first-year nursing student, this certain situation that I experience every day has slowly built up my enthusiasm for studying. Fortunately, this made me part of the university's first-semester dean's list. That is why, this second semester, I am more motivated than the last semester to learn how to provide proper care to other people. I want to somehow help them and lessen the pain or hardships they are dealing with.

Sincerely, I also want to give care to my family, as they have been my support system since day one. Also, to the UCMPhi Foundation and to the sponsors who have also been helping me. I am grateful that I am a scholar of this Foundation because they help me establish the feeling of care for other people, which is why I also want to give it back by studying how to give care to other people medically. Moreover, the people around me became my driving force to study better and achieve the best.
